Not worth more than $3, but for that price or less it performs very well.. Picked this up on sale and is well worth the price of admission imo, dont know why people give a negative review because they cant handle the motion sickness of vr. I had no issues at all with being dizzy and loved every second of the thrill ride. If you can handle this kind of ride in real life and have your "vr legs" you will be fine, but of course if you would sh*t yourself on this ride in real life and/or you dont have your "vr legs" yet you probably dont want to try this out unless you lay out a tarp under you and around you. Would and will ride this many times, along with putting others into this. This game (if you can call it that) does indeed do what the description says. It provides a virtual reality experience of the Slingshot ride you might see at some amusement parks. I have 2 gripes with it though. The minor problem is I got dizzy very quickly after trying it out. And I know, you're in a simulated ride that's supposed to make you dizzy. But it wasn't that kind of dizzy, it was like reading a book in a car kind of dizzy. Just got a head ache and felt nautious. But I could deal with that except for the price. $7.99 is a really steep price for this game. I honestly think it should be free to play when you have cheaper options that provide much more content, like the light saber VR game, and even that doesn't have much content. I know this game isn't supposed to have bunches of content, but the price does not reflect that, and that's why I wouldn't recommend this game.. They lowered their price to $5. But it's a good test to see if your friends can handle VR ;). this game is poorly designed and will not work with htc vive. I would have loved to recommend this game. However, the developers failed to provide even basic instructions on how to get started on this game, As it turns out, you need to press the "Space Bar" to start the game, HTC Vive Controllers do nothing to start the game, and these guys should have known enough to provide a quick guide or tutorial. Game itself is short, and not very realistic like some roller coaster games I tried.. Sorry but can't recommend this, it's the first game I've ever asked to be refunded. I used a WMR headset and the controllers aren't integrated, i.e. they do nothing within the game so I couldn't get anything to happen at all until I read a review that says you have to use the space bar, which is really inconvenient when you can't see due to, you know, having a headset on. So you either need to have someone else present to press the space bar for you, or rush back into position while repositioning your headset.

Also the game doesn't automatically put the player in the correct position on the ride, you are supposed to be in the seat but I was hovering above and to the side of a headless body and I didn't care to try to somehow position myself correctly while at the same time trying to get my headset sorted after pressing the space bar.

. Not good. Poor simulation of a slingshot ride.. took me a min to figure out the space bar is to start the ride.... u will feel a lil nautious as u keep flippin up there but not bad experience but 7.99 is too steep for this quick ride should of been 3.00... so cuz of price i gotta do thumbs down...
